Introducing Talking Cyber: Our new podcast series

We're delighted to announce the launch of our new monthly podcast series, Talking Cyber.

Available on Spotify, our Talking Cyber series will explore an array of different topics that fall under the blanket of cyber security, from cyber education to ransomware and much more!

Podcast host and Security Consultant, David Brauchler says "NCC Group is brimming with brilliant people, ideas, and projects that embody the cutting edge of cyber research and technology. I'm honoured to host a podcast that spotlights the work these experts are doing to advance the information security industry."

In episode one 'Talking cyber security and education', David speaks to Tennisha Martin, executive director for Black Girls Hack and Associate Security Consultant here at NCC Group about education and cyber security, where they explore the difference between education perspectives and reality.

"School curriculums are not up to speed with the pace of cyber security itself, so the things that we're teaching children are a year or so behind, which in cyber security may as well be a decade..."

In episode two, David is joined by colleagues Preston Deason, Security Consultant, and Rob Wood, Technical Vice President, where they take a deep dive into all things hardware security.

"With the right to repair, there's a difference between what is required and what is practical. It's an argument between balancing the security of products but still supporting users in being able to mix and match replacement parts so they don't just have to scrap the device and turn it into e-waste."
