NCC Group adds Microsoft Azure Sentinel to its Managed Detection and Response (MDR) offering

Global cyber security and risk mitigation expert, NCC Group, today announced a further development in its collaboration with Microsoft with the addition of Microsoft Azure Sentinel to its Managed Detection and Response (MDR) offering.

With the introduction of Azure Sentinel security and incident event management (SIEM), NCC Group is fully equipped to manage threat monitoring and detection for Microsoft customers providing early indication if a threat actor has breached, or is attempting to breach, IT assets and infrastructure, based upon our threat intelligence and monitoring of certain log data.

Lee Driver, Global Head of Managed Services at NCC Group, explains: “Microsoft Azure Sentinel is an excellent addition to our existing MDR offering and is a great opportunity for existing Microsoft customers to take advantage of their current licenses and to benefit from solidified threat monitoring and detection capabilities.

Protection against constant cyber threats not only requires talented people but also validated threat intelligence. With our 20 years of experience, continuous up-to-date threat intel and 24/7 expert availability we can support our customers in becoming safer and more secure.”

Through a wide range of MDR services, we enable customers to detect, respond, and recover from threats targeting networks and endpoints. By discovering new and emerging threats, we offer insight and context into malicious activity and response capabilities so customers are able to mitigate damage before it leads to a major data loss incident.
